

COVID-19 and JobKeeper

What was JobKeeper?

JobKeeper was a temporary wage subsidy program designed to help businesses and organizations retain their employees during the COVID-19 pandemic. It was introduced by the Australian Government in May 2020. The program provided a subsidy of up to $1,500 per fortnight per eligible employee, which was used to cover the wages of employees who were not working or whose wages were reduced. The program was available to businesses and organizations that were affected by the pandemic and had a turnover decline of at least 30% in the 2020 financial year. The program was designed to help businesses and organizations retain their employees and maintain their workforce during the pandemic. It was a key component of the Australian Government's response to the economic challenges posed by COVID-19. The program was available until the end of the 2020 financial year, and was extended to the end of the 2021 financial year. The program was a significant part of the Australian Government's economic stimulus package and played a crucial role in supporting the Australian economy during the pandemic.

JobKeeper was a temporary wage subsidy program designed to help businesses and organizations retain their employees during the COVID-19 pandemic. It was introduced by the Australian Government in May 2020. The program provided a subsidy of up to $1,500 per fortnight per eligible employee, which was used to cover the wages of employees who were not working or whose wages were reduced. The program was available to businesses and organizations that were affected by the pandemic and had a turnover decline of at least 30% in the 2020 financial year. The program was designed to help businesses and organizations retain their employees and maintain their workforce during the pandemic. It was a key component of the Australian Government's response to the economic challenges posed by COVID-19. The program was available until the end of the 2020 financial year, and was extended to the end of the 2021 financial year. The program was a significant part of the Australian Government's economic stimulus package and played a crucial role in supporting the Australian economy during the pandemic.
